PENNELL'S THREAT OF MURDER

BARTENDER OF HOTEL ROLAND TELLS HIS STORY. It Is Corroborated by the Cashier of the Hotel-He Sald That Pennell, After Having Several Drinks, Remarked: "You Boys Don't Knew What Is Passing Through My Mind; There is a Man I Could Kill, Even Though I Went to the Gallows"—Pennell Inquest Postponed.

BUFFALO, March 30.—Justice Murphy will announce his findings in the Burdick inquest to-morrow morning. The inquest was closed this morning after the testimony of Bartender Quinn and Cashier King of the Hotel Roland of New York city was heard.

The inquiry into the death of the Pennells, a proceedings of which was much expected. has been postponed indefinitely, or until such time as Justice Murphy may decide upon. The reason announced was the absence of witnesses. The District Attorney said he was ready to go shead and that the postponement was not at his and the inquest could have proce but the case was put over for the given reason that Pennell's attorney and confidential adviser, Mr. Thayer, was not in be city and had not been reached by a subpens. Mr. Thayer is no further off than Albany, and he probably will be home vo-morrow or next day, so in view of the presence of enough witnesses to last all tay, the postponement is a bit of a puzzle.

Pressure had been brought to bear by riends of the Pennells to avoid the inquest r postpone it indefinitely, if not que When it is held, if ever, the probsbility is that neither in Pennell's papers o shocts will anything be produced to show who murdered Burdick. The Pennell heirs have been unwilling to have any of the dead man's papers made public, as they were opposed to the exhibition of the letters ennell wrote to Mrs. Burdick.

The heirs first showed their hands when, inquest last week, Justice Murphy was about to begin the Pennell inquiry. Attorney Penney insisted on a postponement and, indeed, argued against holding any inquest at all. Those who have been most keen to have both mysteries revealed may scover to-morrow, reading between the lines of Justice Murphy's report, someth to indicate the futility of prolonging the Burdick inquest or beginning the Pennell

Perhaps Justice Murphy's finding will indicate that the proceedings have gone far enough already to satisfy the court whether or not a warrant should be issued nnell's arrest, if he were alive; enough to satisfy the court that the ends of the inquiry have been attained so far as Pennell is concerned; enough to satisfy the inquirers so far as the Burdick mystery is ed. Of course, evidence that would cause the issue of a warrant might be only presumptive enough to bring the case before a Grand Jury and not sufficient for a con-

of court Justice Murphy said that he would conclude the Burdick inquest to-day and that the Pennell inquest would be post-poned until such time as he might name. He said that he would announce his findings in the Burdick case to-morrow morning.

The first witness called was Alexander J. Quinn of 251 West Thirty-ninth street, New York. He told this story:

*I was bartender at the Hotal Roland in Est Fifty-ninth street. New York, last December. G. F. Hall King was cashier. In December a gentleman called in and had a conversation with Mr. King and me. He introduced himself to me by a card which read, "Arthur B. Pennell." I have seen pictures of Mr. Pennell in the New York papers, and have seen photographs of Mr. Pennell since I came to Buffalo and they are likenesses of the man who gave the card to me.

rennell since I came to Surato and they are likenesses of the man who gave the card to me.

"On the evening in question Mr. Pennell entered the barroom from the hotel and inquired for the timetable rack. He got a timetable, and after looking at the paintings on the wall he asked the cashier and me to have a drink. After several drinks Mr. Pennell began to talk what I called hot air to me, saying I was a man who ought to have a better position than bartender. I told him I would be glad if he would get a better one and I wrote my name on a piece of paper and gave it to him.

"Mr. Pennell seemed somewhat agitated. 'You boys don't know what's passing through my mind,' he said. 'There is one man I could kill, even if I went to the gallows.' He also said: 'I am spending the happiest days of my life at the expense of another.' While drinking, Mr. King made a toast—'Here's to the friends we love best,' or something like that. The next morning Mr. Pennell had one drink and bade me good-by."

Mr. Pennell had one drink and bade me good-by."

G. F. Hall King, a little man with an English manner, had this story to tell:

"After Mr. Pennell looked at the pictures he and I talked of volcanic eruptions and he asked us to have a drink. Later, while I was at the cigar case about ten feet away I heard him say he 'could or would kill him, at the risk of swinging on the gallows—he would kill him.' When I proposed the toast 'Here's to the friends we love and those that love us, he replied with some toast like 'Here's death.' Then he said: 'This is the happiest time of my life, although at the expense of another."

"This closes the Burdick inquest," said Justics Murphy and he left the bench.

Thomas Penney, attorney for the Pennell heirs, who was to have been called as a witness if the Pennell inquest had been taken up, said later:

"I have examined all the papers belonging to the dead man, which fell into my possession as attorney for the estate, and not in any one of them is there the slightest information which will throw any light on either Burdick's death or the death of Mr. Pennell. There are no letters and no documents of any kind that have any reference whatever to either tragedy. I could not be compelled to produce them under the law, but I am willing to go on the stand and testify concerning them. They will give no information and add nothing new to the case."

RESOLUTION TO BE INTRODUCED IN ASSEMBLY TO-DAY.

The Date Fixed Will Probably Be April 17 -Majority of Mayor Low's Bills Likely to Pail-Brackett Renews His Attack on the Pire Insurance Companies.

ALBANY, March 30 .- That there is serious hought of bringing the Legislative session denced by the fact that to-morrow a reso ution will be introduced in the Assembly by Majority Leader Rogers providing for final adjournment. The date has not been definitely settled yet, but it is believed that the resolution will call for adjournment on April 17 and that it will be adopted in the lower house. The resolution will then go to the Senate and be referred to the Senate Finance Committee and will be amended, it is thought, to provide for adjournment on either April 23 or 24.

After the passage of the Excise bill to-morrow the attention of the leaders will be directed toward the Mortgage Tax bill. something definite will be determined upon as to what shall be done with that measure. The fate of a majority of the Low administration bills is much in doubt. Chairman Burnett of the Assembly Cities Committee says that his committee will report no more of these bills until the Senate

Senator Brackett insists that there is a fire insurance trust in this State and that it has been responsible for greatly increased remium rates for the past year or two. To-night he introduced two bills, each having the same object in view. One amends the Donnelly Anti-Trust law of 1899 declaring agreements between fire is restricted or premium rates fixed, to be in violation of that law.

The other bill amends the Fire Insurance law by prohibiting such combins between fire insurance companies. A vio-lation is made a misdemeanor, and if a person is convicted he may be fined from

If a corporation, the fine is to be from $5,000 to $10,000. For a second offence by a fire insurance corporation the right of the corporation to do business in this State shall be revoked.

The bill amending the Fire-Insurance law was referred to the Insurance Committee and the one amending the Anti-Trust law to Senator Brackett's own Committee on the Judiciary. Senator Brackett figures that, if he cannot get the first bill out of the Insurance Committee can at least, control his own committee and report the other bill favorably to the Senate. He had the Senate clerk send the bills to the printer at once, so that they could be placed on the files as soon as possible.

The Democratic members of the Assembly to-night discovered what they believe to be a joker in another of the Low administration bills. It was in Assemblyman Clark's measure authorizing New York city to acquire control of the Staten Island ferry terminals

One of the provisions of the bill, the Democrats thought, would authorize the city to establish a municipal lighting plant, and other provisions were of such a sweeping character that it is believed the city could do most anything under them. The Senate passed Senator Armstrong's bill, which ostensibly seeks to prohibit the sale of woodcock and grouse in this State. CHARMED MONEY FROM TREAS-URY AGENT'S POCKETS.

Swindler's Face Showed Degeneracy, but His "Beautiful German" Offset It and Was Too Much for the Agent, Who Is New Out of a Job; He Doesn't KnowWhy

Emil Phillipson, a special Treasury agent, who lives at 103 Berkeley place, Brooklyn, received from Washington last Friday a curt note informing him that, dating from the day of the note's receipt, his services would no longer be required by the Treasury Department of the United States.

A few weeks ago Mr. Phillipson, in com-mon with a number of other well-known Germans in Brooklyn and Manhattan boroughs, had the misfortune to be swindled by a surprisingly ugly but mellifuous-tongued and faultlessly attired adventurer from Germany. He does not specifically attribute his dismissal to that circumstance. He has no explanation to offer for it. He frankly admits that he was taken in and done for by a man with a forehead like a baboon, shifty, squinting eyes that could not look one in the face, and a chin so abnormally projecting that it suggested one of the types whose pictures are brought forward by Lombroso to illustrate his theory of degeneracy in connection with criminal

"I don't know whether my dismissa came because of that incident or not." he said yesterday. "I simply am not talking about explanation and may have something to say about it later. But as to the swindling that is quite sure. One day a few weeks ago I received a telephone message from a friend of mine, a Custom House broker, who wished me to call on him to meet gentleman of distinction who had just arrived from Europe. I will not mention the broker's name nor anybody's name who suffered from the swindle

"Well, I met the man. It is not true that he said he was a baron. That is all rot. He said he was the son of a wealthy manufacturer of chemicals who had a factory in Paris, another in Austria and still more in Germany. He wished to get my friend. the Custom House broker, to handle the firm's great business in this country. There were complications in the business, which he minutely and accurately explained in great detail.

"And, oh, what beautiful German he spoke! It was classical! It was such as might have been in a book written by one of the great masters! I looked at his low forehead, his projecting chin and his squinty eyes, and I did not like them. But when he spoke I forgot his degenerate face and thought of nothing but the beautiful, classical German language he uttered. It was so with my friend. My friend invited him to his home to dine and introduced him to many people and to clubs. I did the same got him a year's membership card to ne club to which I belonged. Thank heaven it was a cash on delivery club, not one where you can hang up checks. "Well, I was practically alone in my apartments at that time, and I invited Rudolf Pollak to make my home his hometo come and live with me, in other words And he was very scrupulous. He would be delighted to have my company, he said, and the homelike surroundings; but he could not think of accepting my offer unless I would consent to his compensating me just as he would were he a mong strangers.

"If you will feel better about it,' I said, 'let it be that way,' and he came. His conversation was fascinating. He could talk on any topic and talk so well and so intelligently and in such beautiful German! Ach, that beautiful German!

Well, one day he asked me to lend him a small amount of money. He mentioned up in the multimillionaire's safe, he said. and the multimillionaire was in Philadelhad to borrow paltry sums of money; yet it was none the less awkward to be without the paltry sums when he needed them. I let him have the money. Yet, when he wanted to borrow money it seemed to me that his forehead appeared lower, his squinty eyes more squinty and his proecting chin more strongly indicative of legeneracy. He asked several times and every time he asked it was the same way—chin longer, forehead lower, more and more of the simian type in his face. But his beautiful German always made these ugly things vanish. Ach, that beautiful, beautiful German of his!

"Well; I learned from my friend, the customs broker, that he had been borrowing money from him. I learned that he had been borrowing money from club rowing money from him. I learned that he had been borrowing money from club friends to whom I had introduced him. At last one day he said he was going to St. Louis and that evening he took his trunk and left. Somehow I got suspicious after he was away and I could no longer hear his beautiful German. The next day I went to the Broad street multimilionaire. Then I feared that I had been swindled. There was no $1,800 in the safe. There was not even 18 cents in the safe. There was nothing, and Rudolf Pollak was gone.

"What was he like, this man?' said the multimillionaire. I told him. 'Ah ha-a-a-a,' said the multimillionaire! 'I will send a cablegram to Hamburg!' He sent one.

multimillionaire. I told him. 'Ah ha-a-a-a, said the multimillionaire! 'I will send a cablegram to Hamburg!' He sent one. The next day he got an answer.

"It read in this way: 'Rudolf Pollak swindled here under the name of Wiener.' Then I was convinced I had been swindled. I knew it. I told my friend the customs broker. The customs broker had lent the man-money. Why shouldn't he? Rudolf Pollak had rented a store of the eustoms broker—a store in which to place the tons of chemicals that were coming over! He did not pay any rent for the store in advance. He just rented it—then he borrowed money.

"On Feb. 12, in the evening. Pollak had an adventure. He was going down Broadway, opposite Proctor's Theatre, about 10 o'clock when that pistol duel took place. Pollak got a bullet through his overcoat and his Tuxedo coat and another though his trousers leg. Unfortunately the bullets only hit his clothing. My housekeeper sewed up the holes made by the bullets in his clothing. She also got his washing done for him, but he did not pay for it. I have heard since that one of my friends at the club called Pollak a swindler to his face and he did not resent it. I did not learn that until after he had gone away.

"A few days ago I applied to the Adams street police court for a warrant for the man's arrest. The clerk said that unless I produced the Broad street merchant he could not issue the warrant. We went elsewhere. I will not say where. I do not wish the Broad street merchant to be tormented by reporters."

The pistol duel referred to by Mr. Phillipson was between Phillip Black, who kept a hilliard and poolroom at 100 West Twentyninth street, and Jules Fornell, a well-known Tenderloin character. Each fired six shots. The street was crowded at the time, and everybody scuttled for something to get behind. Black had a bullet wound in his right hand and two bullet holes through his derby hat. Fornell also had two bullet holes in his derby. Wright Kershaw, a post office clerk of 9 Commerce street, was hit by a bullet in the right foot. At midnight Rudolf Pollak came around to the Tenderloin station much excited and showed the bullet holes in his clothing.
